

Clean Out Your Business Closet

Quarterly plan guide

The first step in creating your Annual Business Development Plan is to assess the current condition of your business. Prior to your Free Coaching Session, answer each item honestly and objectively so you and your coach will have an accurate understanding of where you and your business stand now. This will uncover areas that need development and opportunities for growth, which you will use to build your Annual Business Development Plan.

One of the most effective, yet most often neglected, ways of building change into your business plan is by identifying and then monitoring the assumptions that went into it. This worksheet will help you do just that.

In the columns below, list your planning assumptions, the parts of your business plan that are affected by each assumption, and the indicators to watch over time that will tell you if your assumptions are correct. Then select the date when you will review those indicators to see if your assumptions are on track. At the time of your review, determine whether you need to re-assess those portions of your business plan.

If you do want to change your plan at that time, use the preceding Business Development Plan worksheet to identify each item, who will be accountable for revising it, and the due date.
